'Nonsense!' said Larry in alarm. 'I'm not getting fat, Mother, am I?'

'You look as though you've put on a little weight,' Mother admitted, surveying him critically.

'It's your fault,' Larry said unreasonably. 'You will keep tempting me with these aromatic delicacies. You're driving me to ulcers. I shall have to go on a diet. What's a good diet, Margo?'

'Well,' said Margo, launching herself with enthusiasm into her favourite topic, 'you could try the orange-juice and salad one; that's awfully good....'

'No,' said Larry firmly. '...You will all have to resign yourselves to the fact that I shall be taken from you at an early age, suffering from fatty degeneration of the heart.'

At the next meal he took the precaution of having a large dose of bicarbonate beforehand, and then protested bitterly that the food tasted queer.

9. Larry's unrequited love was the cause of everybody's sadness. T
10. Each member of the family was not happy that the spring came. NS
11. Mother was eager to have a garden of her own. NS

0	Miss Darby, who was one of those people who never threw anything away, lived alone in a large Victorian house over the road from us.
00	Although I had never visited her house, I knew that all the rooms were stuffed in with furniture and bric-a-brac of every kind.
1	I knew this, because her cleaning lady used to have come over to our house sometimes for a cup of tea and a chat with my mother. have
2	I once heard her describing the huge bundles of newspapers and goodness knows what anything else that cluttered the house. anything.
3	When Miss Darby died, her twin nephews hired a furniture removal company to take away all her good furniture and paintings, while they made repeated the trips to a rubbish tip with those bundles of old newspapers. repeated.
4	And as they, out of curiosity, opened the last of the bundles, they discovered that between the leaves of each newspaper their crazy old aunt had carefully been put a rare and beautiful print! ✓

5 It was only then that they realized that in throwing away all those papers, they had probably thrown away several thousands of pounds as well. in
